Fashion For Autism: Buy A Fun T-Shirt and Support a Great Cause

By: Michelle Christina Larsen

Amidst the hustle and bustle of Fashion Week, it's important to note that the world doesn't revolve around heel heights and hem-lengths. Starting next week, the Fashion for Autism campaign aims to highlight the endeavors of young artists diagnosed with autism—the exponentially common disorder that impacts 1.5 million people in the US alone. Backed by major labels like Marc Jacobs, Bobbi Brown, Stella McCartney, and Vosges chocolates, the campaign's proceeds will benefit art therapy for children with autism and lend a wave of inspiration to young talent like Kyle Westphal who designed a line of t-shirts with artist Jessie Rose Vala just for the cause (buy yours here—we have ours in black!). RSVP to help out during the Bryant Park festivities, but if you need more incentive, your good deeds also enter you in a chance to win a bunch of goodies including Marc by MJ bag! See you all in the tents!
